The third world is a term coined in the 1950s and used to describe countries that were neither part of the capitalist/industrialized first world, nor part of the communist second world. Although the world today is no longer neatly divided into three, the term “third world” is often used to designate countries in Asia, Africa, and Latin America,...

About | Third World Literature

Third World literature is that literature that is most emphatically not of the First — that is, not of the European, the Europeanized American, and perhaps simply not of the white man's world. In this sense it is Third World literature that inherited, if anything can be said to have done so, the revolutionary,...
